Dearest Uncle Al and Aunt Frances -

So happy to receive your letters Especially glad to hear, Uncle Al, that there's nothing real serious. Am pleased you're feeling better.

Everyone here is fine. For about 6 weeks or so, I've been having those terrible neck pains again.
Last week, I started putting my neck in traction for 20 min. morning & night & doing my neck exercises.
If after a month or so, I'm not better guess I'll go to the doctor again. I'm sure I know what it is - just the deterioration of the discs in my neck. (see page in stat. H.A.)

All in all, the weather has been great here this winter. We've been so blessed in this respect. Today it's supposed to get up to 65°. Noticed some of the jon-

Quins are up quite a lot and my flowering almond, along with some other trees & shrubs, are budding out.

I'm pleased to hear Aunt Teresa appears to be OK. She doesn't write me like she used to. I wrote her about the middle of February but haven't heard a word. I know, or I feel anyway, that she's not mad at me but she just doesn't write much - at least not like she used to. Perhaps it's too hard for her - perhaps her eyes aren't as good as she would like us to think.

Have enclosed some info on the "Elipsons." Hope it is helpful. Agnes Suway called this A. M. & said she got to thinking about my saying her grandmother had been born in England. She said she was almost positive she was born in Ireland & not England. Said she remembered her name was as Irish as "Patty's pig," but doesn't remember her maiden name. Just thought you'd like to know.

Bye for now.

Much love, Gerry

The plant has had an annual rapid growth in California plants doing con-

"All production here will go to domestic markets," Hall says.

The plant compressors when they plan a major expansion of a building equal in size to the main plant building which was put in production in July 1975.

For a while the plant ground heavy castings which were cast at Electron's home plant at Lauriston, Colorado. Of the original 35 workers, John Munoz, plant manager, said
28 were still working on July 1, 1976.

CITY'S MAYOR FOR 15 YEARS

Harry W. Baals (1886-1954) was a native of Fort Wayne, and first entered public life in 1922 as postmaster, serving in that office for nine years. He was elected mayor in 1934, and re-elected for three successive terms. In 1947 he did not stand for re-election but in 1951 emerged from political retirement and was elected to his fourth term.

One of his goals was elevation of the Nickel Plate. He turned the first shovel of dirt in the project, but did not live to see its fulfillment. He was first employed by GE in 1901, and remained there 21 years.

He was an ardent Republican and his political strength lay in his understanding and respect of people. Mayor Baals was buried in Lindenwood, one of America's great historic cemeteries.

OPERATED TRADING POST, GRIST MILL

James Barnett (1785-1851) settled here in 1818, and later joined Samuel Hanna in operation of a trading post. And in 1827, they established Fort Wayne's first grist mill south of town along the St. Mary's River. A dam was built, furnishing water power for the mill.

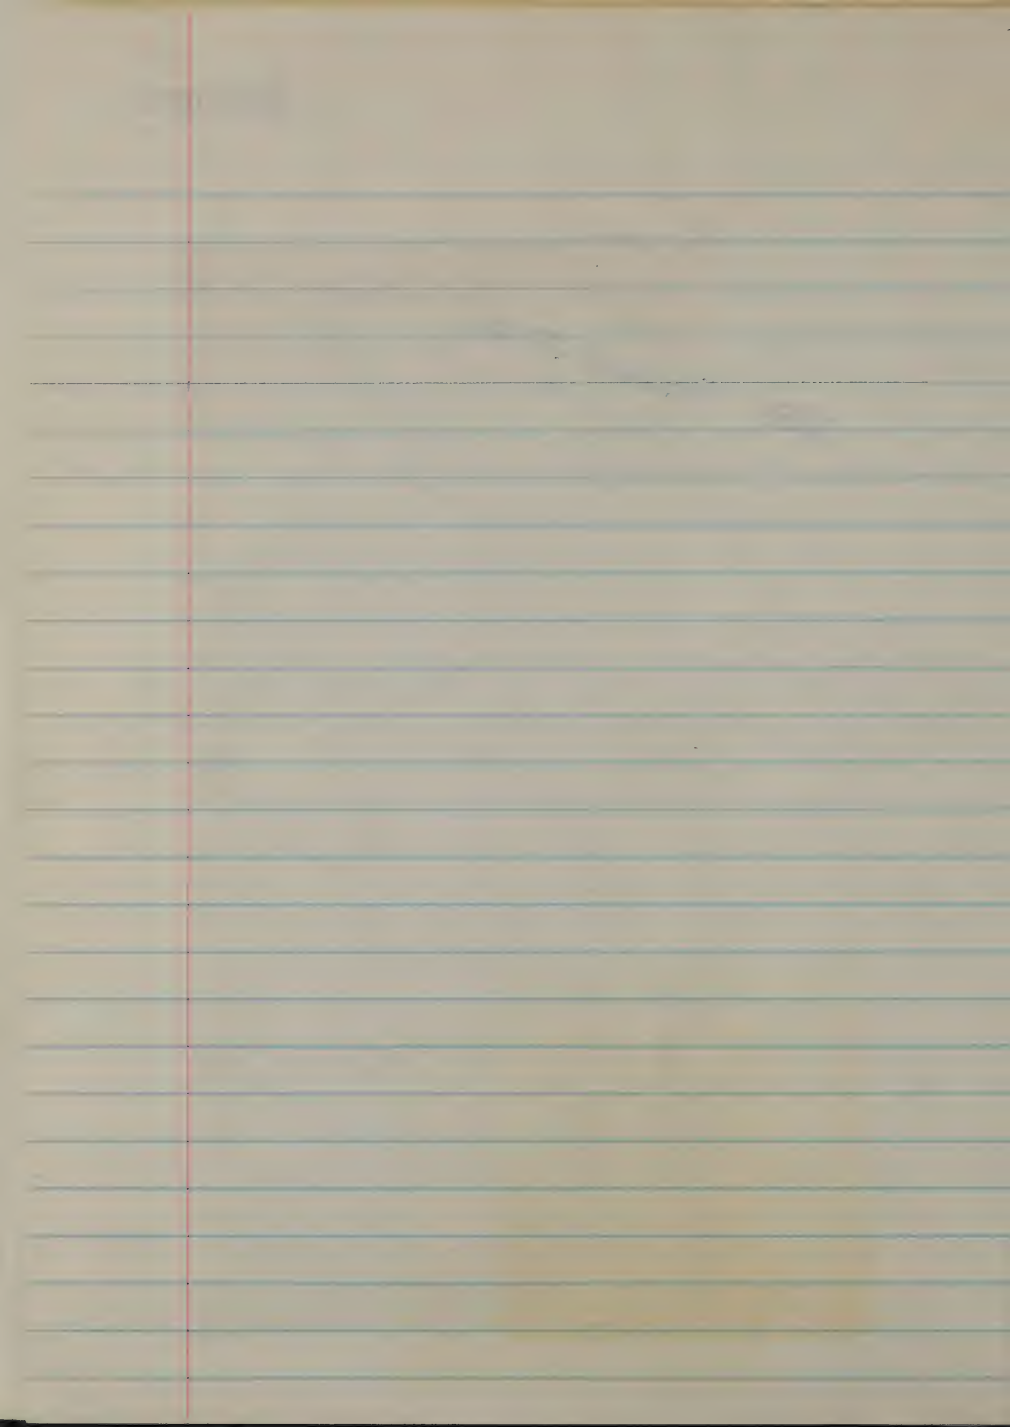

Barnett built the town's first brick house on Columbia St., in 1824. He also owned a log house at Calhoun and Berry, which, in 1849, was converted into a receiving center for victims of a cholera epidemic. Barnett's wife was Nancy W. Hanna, sister of Samuel Hanna.

Before coming here, Barnett served in Gen. Harrison's army. He took part in the July 4, 1835, celebration, signalling the opening of canal operations between Fort Wayne and Huntington. The Barnetts rest in Lindenwood, one of the Nation's great historic cemeteries; where there will be adequate burial facilities for generations to come.

BASH.

FOUNDER OF BASH GRAIN CO., 1870

Solomon Bash (1828-1912) was founder of the old S. Bash & Co., pioneer Fort Wayne grain firm. He was a prominent grain dealer in northern Indiana for 62 years.

Born in Ohio, Mr. Bash came here in 1848, joining Hill & Orbison, and later R. W. Taylor Co., grain dealers on the banks of the Wabash & Erie Canal, then one of the main arteries used by grain shippers of this region. In 1870, Mr. Bash founded the firm bearing his name.

Among his seven children were the late Charles S. Bash, former head of the Bash firm, and the late Harry E. Bash, formerly president of the old Mayflower Mills. Members of the Solomon Bash family are buried in Lindenwood, one of the nation's great historic cemeteries.

Well! Is that sexy, sexist or what? Vermont newspapers front-paged local reaction to the slogan, which some critics felt wrongly pictured Vermont as a destination for swingers and/or singles.

well as business. The image is the thing. Vermont's first ski-promoting ad of the season appeared recently with its new slogan, "A Lot Goes On When the Skis Come Off."

Even the state of Vermont is getting into the act, spending twice as much this winter as last to advertise its Green Mountain skiing. And it is finding that an advertising message can create controversy as well as business. The image is the thing.

That's a pretty rare run of skiing. To be sure, there's a bit in the future, and Sugarbush's competitors aren't sitting still. Killington, which with Stowe and Sugarbush makes up Vermont's Big Three in skiing, spent $8 million in base development this year, including new snowmaking facilities, condominiums and starting development of a new golf course. Mount Mansfield, which services Stowe's skiers, spent $1.5 million this past summer on mountain improvements and is starting to build new accommodations at the base of the mountain.

But Sugarbush isn't stopping here. Plans are being developed to link it with its recently acquired Sugarbush North ski area by building new trails, lifts and accommodations in Slidebrook Valley between the two, and when that's done, Sugarbush will have trails as long as eight miles. That's a pretty fair run of skiing.

"There's an obvious double entendre," admitted Gregory Gerdel, Vermont's manager of travel development, "but the campaign itself is really oriented to the variety of experiences you can have in Vermont in addition to skiing — dining, ice skating, in-

Left: Some of the structures of Bass Foundries still stand near Hanna and Wallace streets. Below: An overview of the plant.

Cityscapes: Life of Bass Foundry

Editor's note: This article is the fourth in a series on important industries in early Fort Wayne.

The iron horse used to move the nation. And Fort Wayne's Bass Foundry moved the iron horse.

At the turn of the century, the Bass Foundry and Machine Co. was to Fort Wayne what International Harvester is today. Bass was the world's leading manufacturer of railroad wheels and also produced boilers and other essential rail-related items.

The foundry was the city's biggest and most important industry. At one time it employed 1,100 men and boasted a then-sizeable monthly payroll of $35,000. The plant itself was "so vast... nothing can sufficiently portray its size," according to a story in the Fort Wayne Gazette on Jan. 1, 1888.

Today, though, just a few old-looking buildings along Hanna Street are all that's left of what was once the city's industrial centerpiece.

The railroad came to northern Indiana in 1852, and within years the existing canal system was a ghost. It was obvious to most that the railroad would soon be king, and scores of supporting industries began to emerge.

One of the first here was the Fort Wayne Machine Works, which in 1857 began casting steel items for the railroad. Enter John H. Bass, born in Kentucky in 1835, who in 1862 purchased the works from his older brother Sion. Sion Bass was killed during the Civil War at the battle of Shiloh.

John Bass kept the foundry going, soon building it into national importance. Within a decade, he had opened similar foundries in St. Louis, Chicago, Atlanta and Tennessee.

Bass quickly became a wealthy man, as the increasing demand for train travel caused an increasing demand for train components. He built a magnificent home, Brookside, which was known for its lake, gardens and wildlife preserve.

Today, the old Bass home serves as St. Francis College's administration building.

Bass died in 1922, and the foundry's fate after that was not happy. Bass products no longer dominated the marketplace and in 1939 the foundry, ravaged by the Depression, filed for reorganization under federal bankruptcy law, claiming debts of $250,000.

Soon after, the foundry's remaining 270 employees went on strike demanding a 10-cents-an-hour pay increase.

In 1941, the company was purchased by a Hoosier living in California named Thomas Simmons. World War II, for a time, brought new life to the old place, which had to hire hundreds of new employees to produce war goods.

But the Bass foundry closed up shop after World War II ended, and today the remaining buildings are occupied by Shrex office supply and National Heat Treating Corp. Some are vacant, their windows boarded shut to discourage vandals. ■

KEY WEST, Fla. — Known for its scrappy independence, this resort island town possesses an aura of tolerance and freedom in which the most eccentric misfits of society can feel at home.

Like for the 29,000 residents of Key West is much like a carnival — what one resident writer called "a return to one's youth." Here among the sparkling beaches, old frame houses and lush vegetation, a unique breed of adventurers has gathered to pursue dreams that eluded them elsewhere.

Perhaps no other town its size has the varying degree of personality types. Respectable businessmen, die-hard hippies, writers, artists, bean transplants, homosexuals and long-time resident "Conchs" call the island home. They live out their days at a relaxed, unfettered pace.

"The pace is generally much slower here," said Chamber of Commerce President John Howard. "You can usually put off until tomorrow what you're supposed to do today and manage to survive and get away with it."

"Nobody in Key West ever dresses up," he said. "It's almost true that they go to wakes and weddings in shorts and sandals and sports shirts. You seldom see anybody wearing a tie. If you do, he's probably a banker, a lawyer or the publisher of the paper or an FBI agent."

With so many vastly different social groups inhabiting the tiny 2-by-4-mile island, there has arisen a tolerance of differing beliefs and lifestyles unheard of in most communities of Key West's size.

"The island doesn't judge," said Vic Latham, a 14-year Key West resident and owner of a local bar. "I'll talk about you, but it's not going to lay sociological restrictions on you."

"I have a whole theory about what I call fringe people who don't have the focus to be a genius, but are too sharp to be acceptable to society. And I think this area draws that kind of people," Latham said.

Last November, Key West grabbed national headlines when Richard Heyman, an art gallery owner and homosexual, was elected mayor by a 54 percent majority.

Though critics charged his election would adversely affect the city's image, Latham said most islanders place little importance on Heyman's sexual preference and consider him to be an intelligent, dedicated leader.

Heyman said his main objective as mayor is to ensure the island's unique, historical tradition is not trampled by unbridled development of resort hotels and condominiums.

"The city has to have control. Heretofore, we haven't had much control," he said. "The developers have been dictating, building very high buildings... and we hope to take that away."

In addition to their live-and-let-live attitude, Key Westers possess a fierce autonomy resulting from a long history of economic booms and busts and a 130-mile isolation from the mainland.

In 1982, some 3,000 residents symbolically seceded from the United States and formed the "Conch Republic" to protest an unannounced roadblock of the only road leading to the island by Border Patrol agents searching for drugs and illegal aliens.

The roots of this independent spirit are tied to the island's economic ups and downs, which have been dictated by transient industries dating back to the early 1800s when Key West's earliest businessmen were maritime salvagers, who waited like anxious vultures for cargo-laden ships to pass through the Florida Straits and wreck on the island's coral reefs.

It was shortly before World War II that Key West's most famous resident arrived, living here off and on for 50 years while perfecting his craft.

At his spacious, wrought iron-laced mansion on Whitehead Street, Ernest Hemingway worked on some of his greatest novels. Other writers, such as Tennessee Williams and Robert Frost, also came to Key West for the warm climate and quiet isolation. Today, the island continues to draw many novelists, poets and painters — some well known, others obscure.

'Brookside' was grandest home in city

CITYSCAPES

Industrialist John Bass made fortune in aftermath of Civil War

Just north of Lindenwood Cemetery and west of the Nebraska Neighborhood is "Brookside," once the home of the powerful family of John and Laura Bass. Today, affectionately known as "The Castle," it is the library and centerpiece of St. Francis College, 2701 Spring St.

Built in 1902-1903, under the direction of Fort Wayne architects John Wing and Marshall Mahurin, the 33-room Romanesque mansion was a paragon of late Victorian opulence — the grandest home in Fort Wayne. The 15-foot ceilings spanning the huge rooms, opened by 127 plate glass windows and 11 large stained-glass pieces, give some sense of the grandeur in which the Bass family lived.

Closely modeled after European rooms that impressed the Basses on their tours of the Continent, the parlor greets (or overawes, as was intended) the visitor with its rich Louis XIV style. The lace window shades came from Austria and the silk wall coverings found in almost all rooms were imported from Italy. The coffered wooden ceiling and the lavish woodwork are a mixture of a light and dark maple, and the gas fireplace is a lush Italian marble.

Opulent rooms throughout Nearby, filled with overstuffed furniture, is the great hall that served as the family room; in its center stood a huge carved table under a beaded Tiffany lamp. Next to this was the formal dining room, fully 40 feet long. Here, a great mural completely encircled the room showing a medieval hunt; it was inspired by the "Boar Hunt" mural the Basses had seen in Kensington Palace, in England. But, offended by the raging old boar, the Basses instead had a more romantic stag painted as the object of the hunt.

On the second floor, there were several bedrooms furnished in period styles. One, the Louis XVI Room, still has the silk wall coverings. The Napoleon Room, done in a golden tapestry, had a portrait of the Emperor himself hanging watchfully over the canopied bed, and the Louis XIV Room, colored in rose, has a fireplace that is a celebration in fine woodwork.

There also were the grand ballroom, with a domed skylight and Colonial American decor; the Billiard Room noted for its African woodworking and "Dutch" style murals; a striking Blue Room, and the brocade-covered walls of the spiraled staircase.

Among the notable "modern" fixtures of the mansion were the burglar alarms and the automatic lighting systems. In each of the bedrooms, the closets were fashioned so that, like today's refrigerator, the light would come on when the door was opened and go off when it closed.

"Brookside," the mansion built by John and Laura Bass in 1902-03, is now the St. Francis College library (above). In its prime, it sat in the midst of a 65-acre estate that was maintained as a natural preserve and wildlife park. The photo at right appeared in the 1906 edition of Souvenir of Fort Wayne, published by S.H. Knox and Co.

All the windows were wired, and if one was broken, an alarm would sound in the nearest police station.

In the master bedroom, was a central control board next to the bed. Once activated, if an intruder entered the house an alarm would ring throughout the building. Lights would come on, and arrows on the board would indicate the prowler's location. In addition, buttons near the bedroom fireplace could turn on any of the lights downstairs, which then could not be turned off anywhere else.

The show of grandeur and wealth did not end with the mansion itself. The 65-acre estate was called "Brookside" because of the small stream that ran near the house. This creek was dammed in order to create Mirror Lake, where a rustic gazebo and bridge were erected on an artificial island which served as a hideaway.

Estate natural preserve

The estate itself was maintained as a natural preserve and wildlife park. Numerous varieties of trees, shrubs and flowers were planted everywhere. The lake was heavily stocked with fish and boasted many swans and geese. A herd of elk and several head of buffalo wandered the grounds. Breeding herds of imported Galo-way cattle and Clydesdale horses were kept as part of a very successful livestock and dairy operation.

This magnificent estate was not the first to occupy the site; the original "Brookside" was built in 1887. Although somewhat less opulent, the first "Brookside" was very similar in design. But in 1902, a fire broke out beneath the parlor when a gas line ruptured. The building was gutted and the family barely escaped with their lives, running from the house in their nightshirts.

Construction was ordered to begin immediately, and a new "Brookside" was finished in two years. This time, however, the mansion was built with the best fire retarddant materials available in 1903.

The man responsible for Brookside was John H. Bass, Fort Wayne's leading industrialist.

Born in Salem, Ky., in 1835, John Bass was the son of Ohio valley settlers from Virginia and North Carolina who had strong sympathies for the South. In 1852, at age 17, Bass followed his older brother, Sion, to Fort Wayne, and worked as a bookkeeper in Samuel Edsall's grocery store. With his brother, in 1853, he became a partner in a modest machine works of Jones, Bass and Co. at the site of the present-day main post office.

In the years between 1853 and 1857, John Bass used his small amount of capital ($3,700) from the machine shop to buy and sell land on the Iowa frontier. When he returned to Fort Wayne, he had $15,000 in cash and land holdings worth more than $50,000. Jones, Bass and Co. was sold to the railroad, marking the beginning of the huge Penny Shops. With the profits, the Bass brothers, this time with Sam Hanna, started yet another foundry and machine business.

But when the Civil War broke out in 1861, Sion Bass volunteered to fight for the North, forming in Fort Wayne the Thirtieth Indiana Regiment and taking command as its colonel. Sion led his regiment in the opening battles of the war, and on the second day of the Battle of Shiloh, in April 1962, he was mortally wounded.

A few years before, Sion had married Eliza M. George, the daughter of "Mother George" who became widely known and loved as an angel of mercy for Union troops in the hospitals; she herself died while tending wounded soldiers in North Carolina. But this family was not well received by the surviving Bass clan.

That same year, 1862, John Bass purchased his partners' interests in the company and founded the Bass Foundry and Machine Works, locating the first plant on the southern side of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad tracks (the Penny Line). This company at first specialized in the manufacture of railroad axles and wheels, which were used across the tracks in the construction of cars and locomotives at the Penny Shops.

Because of the war, huge profits came to the Bass Foundry, and within 10 years, the company and its affiliates had become the world's largest manufacturer of rolling equipment for trains.

Soon after the Civil War ended in 1865, John Bass married into the good old southern family of Lightfoot, just as his mother had wished. (She never quite forgave her son, Sion, for taking sides with the Yankees and marrying into the unknown George family.)

Laura Lightfoot was the descendant of Laura was 13 years John's junior and a resident of Falmouth, Ky., (near Cincinnati) when they met. The stories were told in the family about how pretty Laura entertained at the piano whichever troops, blue or gray, happened to be in control of her borderland town and the hotel her mother operated.

One story ran that she gave a young Confederate a small flag as a token, which he wore for her at his breast. Later, he was found dead on a battlefield, a bullet hole through the little flag. Her brother, Nick Lightfoot, another story goes, let his southern sympathies get the better of him and he hoisted the Confederate flag on the hotel roof when Union troops occupied Falmouth. He was thrown into prison where he languished for some time, drawing remarkably lively pictures of his captors on the jailhouse walls, until he died of "consumption" from the dampness.

The family fortunes of Laura and John Bass, however, rose to the top of Fort Wayne society in the four decades after the Civil War. John founded the St. Louis Car Wheel Co. in 1869, and in the succeeding two decades, like other great capitalists of his time, sought to extend his control over his competition by seizing the very natural resources that supplied his raw materials for production. So, by 1875, he also owned high grade iron ore mines in Alabama and Tennessee, and he established a major ironworks in Chicago in 1873, taking advantage of the ideal building opportunities following the great Chicago Fire of 1871.

Beyond foundries, machine shops, and mines, John Bass also was one of the organizers of the Fort Wayne Organ Co. (later the Packard Piano Co.) and the Citizens Street Railway Co., the first trolley company in Fort Wayne. For 30 years, from 1867 to 1917, Bass was president of the First Federal Bank of Fort Wayne (later the First and Hamilton), a precursor of today's Fort Wayne National Bank.

Throughout, however, the great Bass Foundry was the center of his fortune. At its height, the company employed 2,500 workers, producing not only railroad axles and wheels, but also everything from huge steam engines, whole power plants, and boilers to vaults and jailhouse doors.

When John Bass died in 1922, he was hailed, appropriately, as Fort Wayne's Andrew Carnegie. Like Carnegie, he was especially fond of donating organs to churches, for he loved the rich, opulent tones the instrument produced. It was fitting, then, that within days of his funeral, Laura Bass ordered that two of the finest Eskey electric organs, with 3,000 pipes, be made and given to the First Presbyterian Church of Brattleboro, Vt., and to Fort Wayne's Scottish Rite Cathedral.

Key West: eccentric paradise for misfits

By LEE HONEYCUTT

KEY WEST, Fla. — Known for its scrappy independence, this resort island town possesses an aura of tolerance and freedom in which the most eccentric misfits of society can feel at home.

Life for the 29,000 residents of Key West is much like a carnival — what one resident writer called "a return to one's youth." Here among the sparkling beaches, old frame houses and lush vegetation, a unique breed of adventurers has gathered to pursue dreams that eluded them elsewhere.

Perhaps no other town its size has the varying degree of personality types. Respectable businessmen, die-hard hippies, writers, artists, Caribbean transplants, homosexuals and long-time resident "Conchs" call the island home. They live out their days at a relaxed, unfettered pace.

"The pace is generally much slower here," said Chamber of Commerce President John Howard. "You can usually put off until tomorrow what you're supposed to do today and manage to survive and get away with it."

"Nobody in Key West ever dresses up," he said. "It's almost true that they go to wakes and weddings in shorts and sandals and sports shirts. You seldom see anybody wearing a tie. If you do, he's probably a banker, a lawyer or the publisher of the paper or an FBI agent."

With so many vastly different social groups inhabiting the tiny 2-by-4-mile island, there has arisen a tolerance of differing beliefs and lifestyles unheard of in most communities of Key West's size.

"The island doesn't judge," said Vic Latham, a 14-year Key West resident and owner of a local bar. "It'll talk about you, but it's not going to lay sociological restrictions on you."

"I have a whole theory about what I call fringe people. They're people who don't have the focus to be a genius, but are too sharp to be acceptable to society. And I think this area draws that kind of people," Latham said.

Last November, Key West grabbed national headlines when Richard Heyman, an art gallery owner and homosexual, was elected mayor by a 54 percent majority.

Though critics charged his election would adversely affect the city's image, Latham said most islanders place little importance on Heyman's sexual preference and consider him to be an intelligent, dedicated leader.

Heyman said his main objective as mayor is to ensure the island's unique, historical tradition is not trampled by unbridled development of resort hotels and condominiums.

"The city has to have control. Heretofore, we haven't had much control," he said. "The developers have been dictating, building very high buildings . . . and we hope to take that away."

In addition to their live-and-let-live attitude, Key Westers possess a fierce autonomy resulting from a long history of economic booms and busts and a 130-mile isolation from the mainland.

In 1982, some 3,000 residents symbolically seceded from the United States and formed the "Conch Republic" to protest an unannounced roadblock of the only road leading to the island by Border Patrol agents searching for drugs and illegal aliens.

The roots of this independent spirit are tied to the island's economic ups and downs, which have been dictated by transient industries dating back to the early 1800s when Key West's earliest businessmen were maritime salvagers, who waited like anxious vultures for cargo-laden ships to pass through the Florida Straits and wreck on the island's coral reefs.

It was shortly before World War II that Key West's most famous resident arrived, living here off and on for 30 years while perfecting his craft.

Prayer

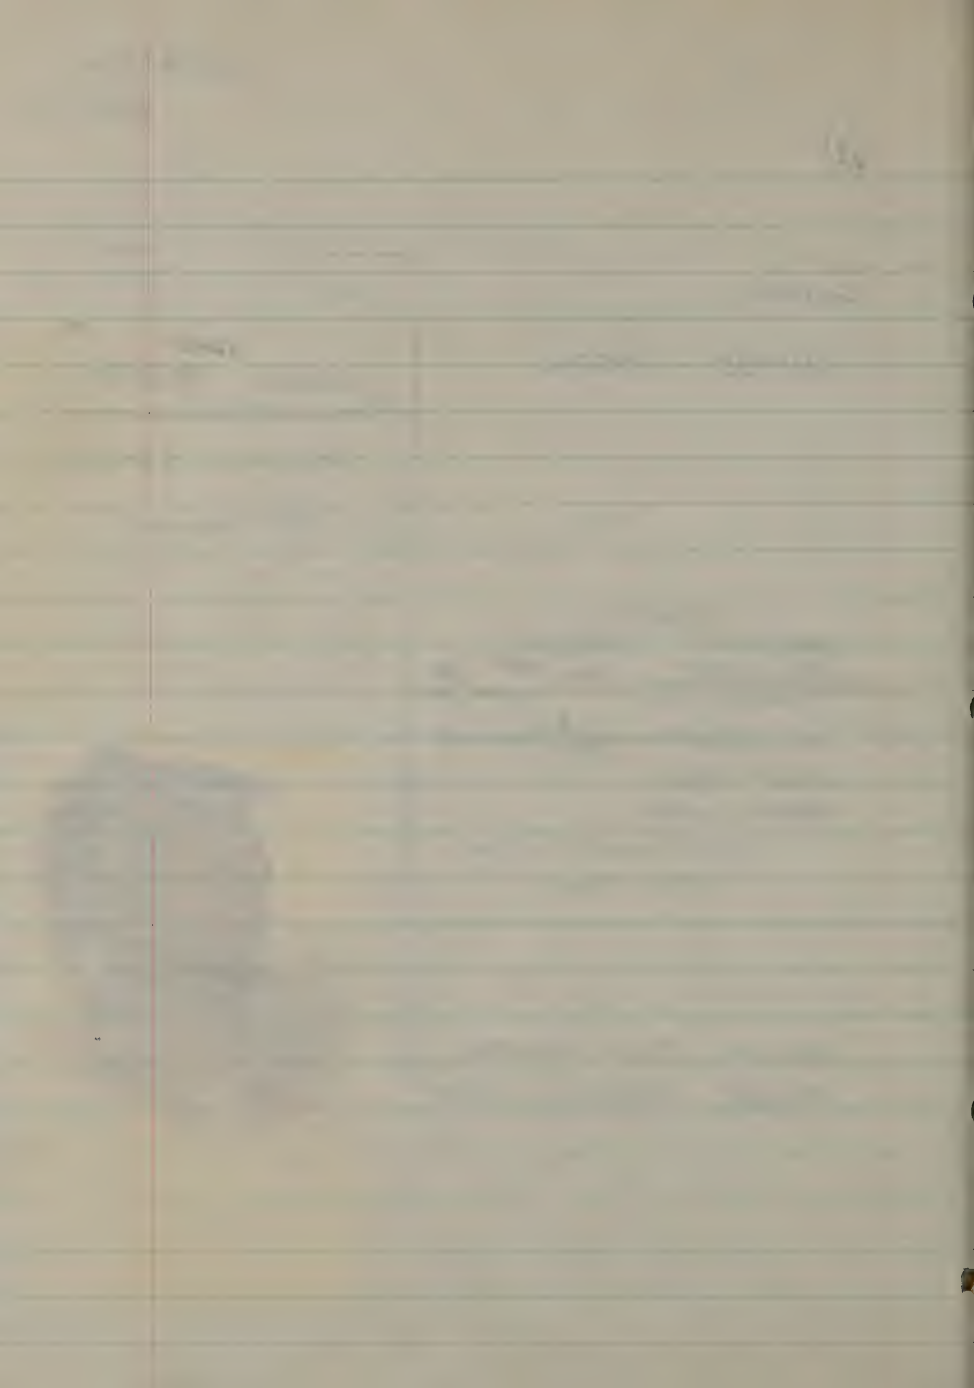

Lord make me an instrument of Thy peace; where there is hatred, let me sow love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; and where there is sadness, joy.

O Divine Master, grant that I may not so much seek to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved as to love; for it is in giving that we receive, it is in pardoning that we are pardoned, and it is in dying that we are born to eternal life.

☉ GENTLEST Heart of Jesus, ever present in the Blessed Sacrament, ever consumed

John

Be not severe in Thy judgment but let some drops of Thy Precious Blood fall upon the devouring flames, and do Thou O merciful Saviour send Thy angels to conduct him to a place of refreshment, light and peace. Amen.

May the souls of all the faithful departed through the mercy of God, rest in peace.
Amen.

Eternal rest grant unto him, O Lord! and

SOL. D. BAYLESS PROMINENT MASON

Solomon D. Bayless, (1814-1875) former local postmaster, was one of Fort Wayne's distinguished Freemasons of his time. Sol D. Bayless Lodge No. 359 F. & A.M., was founded in his honor in 1866. He became a Mason in Troy, O., and affiliated here with Wayne Lodge No. 25, becoming its Master in 1861. He later became head of the four grand bodies of Indiana Freemasonry.

He resided in a brick dwelling at Wayne and Clinton, and for a number of years was U.S. Pension Agent. He died May 30, 1875, and friends came from all parts of the midwest for his funeral. He was buried in Lindenwood, final resting place of many generations of our citizens from all walks of life.
